Polish party leaders [redacted] that they must cooperate with the union Solidarity, but the party will seek to isolate "antisocialists" within the union and apparently hopes to prepare a case to have the union declared illegal. [redacted]

[redacted] Kania and Central Committee Secretary Grabski [redacted] last Monday that the party leadership was satisfied with the Supreme Court's decision concerning the union's statutes. Grabski reportedly [redacted] that Solidarity had taken the initiative to seek a compromise on the issue of how the union should acknowledge the leading role of the party. [redacted]

Grabski indicated that the party considers the supplement to the union's statutes--in which the union makes its ideological declaration--to be an integral part of the statutes. The leaders [redacted] also said that the Prosecutor General would request the Supreme Court to revise Solidarity's statutes should the union abuse the right to strike. [redacted]

[redacted] the party will closely monitor statements and interviews of union leaders, "illegal" publications, and abuses of the right to strike. [redacted]

The party also has prepared a propaganda campaign that is to emphasize that the party will honor its agreements and expects Solidarity to do the same. [redacted]
